A. Notes

All data are extracted from the House of Commons Library Divisions Database using the records published in uncorrected daily Hansard, available on the Parliamentary website<sup>3</sup> and intranet<sup>4</sup>. Members' participation in Commons Divisions can be affected by a number of factors. These may include:

- Abstentions: there is no provision in the House of Commons for a formal abstention, so a Member not wishing to vote either for or against a motion is simply recorded as not voting. Parties may decide to have a whipped abstention on certain divisions.
- Ministerial or Opposition front-bench duties. A current list of Ministers and Opposition front-benchers is available on the Parliament website.<sup>5</sup>
- Visits abroad as part of a Parliamentary or Committee delegation. Current membership of Parliamentary international delegations is reported in the Weekly Information Bulletin.<sup>6</sup> Membership for the previous Session is reported in the Sessional Information Digest, also published by the House of Commons Library.<sup>7</sup>
- Constituency business or party duties.
- Pairing and 'bisques': MPs who are 'paired' have agreed with their pair not to vote, even if they are present within the precincts of the House. Formal pairing between the Government and Opposition has not occurred since the 1997 election. Since 1997, a previously-used system known as 'bisques' (a term derived from croquet) has been used such that, with a large Government majority, a proportion of Labour MPs might be absent on specified days. Bisques are arranged so that the Government can always expect a reasonable majority, and could always command the votes needed for the closure of debate.
- Personal circumstances such as illness, bereavements, maternity/paternity leave.
- MPs in certain posts do not usually vote, for example, the Speaker and his deputies. By long standing convention, a Member who has chaired a Standing Committee on a Bill takes no further part in any proceedings relating to that Bill. Other informal arrangements may apply, for example Members may choose not to vote on certain types of business or on matters affecting particular parts of the country.
