A bill with characteristics of both a public bill and a private bill is called a hybrid bill. Such bills are examined in Parliament by a combination of both procedures. See also Factsheets L1 and L4.

Introduction

A hybrid bill has characteristics of both a public bill and a private bill. Although of general interest, the content of the bill would significantly affect the interests of certain individuals or organisations. The bill's progress through parliament therefore includes elements of both the public bill and private bill procedures.

Speaker Hylton-Foster described a hybrid bill as "a public bill which affects a particular private interest in a manner different from the private interests of other persons or bodies of the same category or class".

Hybrid bills may be introduced by the Government or by a backbencher. These bills are introduced only rarely, the last occasion being the Crossrail Bill introduced in 2004.

Examination

It is not always clear whether a bill should be introduced through the public, private or hybrid bill procedure. Every public bill is examined in the Department of the Clerk of the House before second reading for its compliance with the House's rules. In determining this they take into account the practice and precedents of many years. If the Clerks consider that private interests may be affected, the House will order the bill to be considered by the Examiners of Petitions for private bills. If they find that any standing orders for private business apply to the bill it is treated as a Hybrid, if the Standing Orders do not apply then the bill proceeds as a public bill. Once the bill has been referred to the Examiners it appears on the Order Paper with a note 'to be reported on by the Examiners'. Second reading cannot take place until the Examiners report. However, in 1976, the House approved a motion to set aside any application to the Aircraft & Shipbuilding Industries Bill (a Government bill) of the Private Business Standing Orders.

Bills brought in by the Government (or a backbencher) which propose to undertake works of national importance, but in a local area, have usually been hybrid. Examples include the Croydon Aerodrome Extension Bill of 1924-25, the British Museum Bill of 1962-63, the Maplin Development Bill of 1972-73 and the Channel Tunnel Bills in the 1970s and 1980s. A list of all hybrid bills introduced since the 1985-86 session of Parliament is given in the Appendix on page 5.

Other examples of bills which have been proceeded with as hybrids are the Port of London Bills 1903 and 1908, the London Passenger Transport Bill in 1931, the Bank of England Bill in 1945 and the Transport (London) Bill of 1968-69.

Bills relating to London have sometimes been hybrid, but in recent years most major bills relating to the capital have been considered as public bills, e.g. the Greater London Authority (Referendum) Bill in 1998 and Greater London Authority Bill in 1999. Bills relating to the City of London have usually been private but occasionally hybrid.

Private Members Bills

Private Members may introduce a public bill that the Examiners decide is hybrid, because it is to all intents and purposes a private bill. Such a bill has little chance of becoming law, but a political point will have been made. Examples of such bills are the Epsom & Walton Downs Regulation (Amendment) Bill of 1952-53 and the West Midlands County Council (Abolition) Bill in 1981-82.

Proceedings on the bill

Preliminary proceedings

A Minister or other Member in charge of a Public bill should be aware at an early stage that it could contain elements of a Hybrid bill. In the case of a Government bill, the Parliamentary draftsmen or Department concerned will almost certainly have pointed this out: steps will have been taken to ensure compliance with Standing Orders (with regard, for example, to advertisements, the drawing up of any necessary plans, etc). Where the Examiners find that the bill has not complied with Standing Orders, it is referred to the Standing Orders Committee (as under Private bill procedure: see Factsheet L4). If this Committee decides that the bill should not proceed, the promoters of the bill usually abide by this decision.

Second reading

The procedure for second reading of a hybrid bill is the same as for a public bill. After second reading, in order to enable anyone specially and directly affected by the bill to make their case against it, the bill is committed to a select committee, normally made up partly of members chosen by the House and of others chosen by the Committee of Selection; the Channel Tunnel Bill in 1985-86 however, was sent to a Committee of nine Members, wholly chosen by the Committee of Selection. The motion to refer the bill to a select committee normally also sets down the requirements for the receipt of petitions against the bill.

Petitions

Any individuals or organisations that oppose the bill can submit petitions against it. The petitions have to be deposited within a stipulated time in the Private Bill Office and must conform to the rules for petitions against private bills.

If the promoter of a bill challenges the status (locus standi) of a petitioner, the select committee itself determines who may and who may not be heard and on which sections of the bill. Decisions of the Court of Referees, who decide similar cases relating to private bills, are binding on the Committee.

Proceedings if no Petitions are Deposited

If no petitions are deposited against the bill within the stipulated time, the bill will be recommitted to a standing committee or committee of the whole House, who will then consider it in the same way as a public bill.

Select Committee

If petitions are received, the select committee will meet and consider the bill in very much the same way as a private bill committee would (see Factsheet L4). However, there are certain differences; in particular, that the promoters do not need to establish the need for the bill since the House has already put on record its approval of the principle of the bill at second reading.

First the petitioners make their case, calling witnesses if necessary. Witnesses are normally examined on oath. When the opponents of the bill have completed their case, and the promoters have been heard in reply, the committee considers the clauses of the bill, reporting it to the House with or without amendment. If the committee wishes to communicate its view on the subject matter of the bill, or if the promoters no longer wish the bill to proceed, the committee may make a special report to the House.

Later Stages

The bill, once reported, is normally re-committed to a committee of the whole House or to a standing committee. Report stage and third reading take the same form as all other public bills. The bill is then sent to the House of Lords where there is a further opportunity for objectors to petition and to appear before a select committee.

Carry-Over between Sessions

As with private bills, the House has, when necessary, considered motions to suspend hybrid bills from one session to another: the Channel Tunnel Rail Link Bill was suspended twice. When a General Election has been called, motions have also been considered to allow hybrid bills to recommence at the point they had reached before the election. Motions of these kinds may, of course, be opposed and negated; in which case the bill would fall, or have to start all over again.

Tracking the progress of hybrid bills

Hybrid bills appear in the "Public bills before Parliament" section of the Weekly Information Bulletin, with HYBRID in brackets after the title. These words do not form part of the official title of the bill.

Royal Assent

When both Houses have approved a Hybrid bill, it receives Royal Assent in exactly the same way as a public bill. These Acts are numbered in the Public and General Acts series.

Transport and Works Act 1992

In 1993, the private bill procedure for projects authorising works to railways, tramways, canals etc, was replaced by orders under the Transport and Works Act 1992 (see Factsheet L4). However, such projects may still be introduced by means of a hybrid bill. So, for example, the Channel Tunnel Rail Link was authorised by a hybrid bill, though the proposal for a station at Stratford, which came later, was dealt with under the Transport and Works Act procedures.
