

Many members of the public seem to expect their MP to be magicians. Some of us are aware that this is not the case and that our personal plea or opinion may well be regarded as being unworthy of serious consideration. There is no solution to this issue as we vote (generally) in the hope that our elected representative will be thoughtful and intelligent though I cannot expect him or her to represent me or my views. Democracy is, in reality, a handing-over of responsibility to a person in whom trust can be placed in the hope that a reasonable morality will exist. This does happen sometimes! Regards, Martyn Lloyd
