Point of interest: More high-profile and controversial legislation tends to be introduced in the House of Commons. This legislation tends to attract more attention and interest in the Lords too. This likely explains why more amendments tend to be tabled against Commons-starting Bills than against Lords-starting Bills.

2	Report	Amendment 8	B. Merron	C 180 ; NC 176	Yes (LA 4)
		Amendment 11	L. Alton of Liverpool	C 172 ; NC 156	Yes (LA 5)

Note: The last column shows only what happened when the matter was next considered in the Commons. If the same matter gave rise to a further defeat in the Lords, it will appear again in the table. Otherwise, to find out how the matter was ultimately resolved, the user will need other sources of information. The information in this table is believed to be accurate but is not authoritative.

Point of interest: If an Opposition amendment is agreed in the Lords this tends to be the result of a Division resulting in a Government defeat. Therefore, it is interesting to look at whether such amendments are accepted or reversed by the Government using its majority in the Commons, whether amendments in lieu are offered, or whether another outcome is reached.
